

When I heard on public radio that the FCC was going to try to override the Wisconsin Do Not Call restrictions with the more lax federal restrictions, I felt a slight twang of fear. The restrictions enforced by Wisconsin are there because the Wisconsin public wants them. When did "for the people" become "for the most influential company"? I enjoy my privacy and don't care to listen to my phone ring 4-5 times in one evening because someone wants to sell me something. If I want something, I will contact them, not vice versa. The company may scream and throw tantrums claiming that their rights to conduct business is being trampled, but what about the human right to spend time with family, friends, and loved ones without a phone call from someone who won't take no for an answer. Please uphold Wisconsin's State's Rights to protect their citizens. Afterall, we spoke and they listened.
